Art Notes

New Year's picks from the Dallas art community

By Catherine D. Anson

December 21, 2009

Fair Season: We're looking forward to the Dallas Art Fair, year two. Save our special section in this issue, for who to peruse and what to collect at Texas' foremost art fair. And for the first time, two celebrated London dealers travel across the pond to exhibit, joining 50 notable national and Texas gallerists, up from last year's number of exhibitors by nearly 20. Mark these dates on your calendar: Friday through Sunday, February 5 through 7, at Fashion Industry Gallery (F.I.G.); dallasartfair.com. Blue Skies: Nothing looks more optimistic than Ted Kincaid's new series of sky images at Marty Walker Gallery (through February 13; Walker is also one of 15 Texas dealers to participate in the Dallas Art Fair, so look for some Kincaids in her booth there, too). Kincaid's a wizard in the photo-based field, deftly concocting images that hover between the real and the conjured. We still have memories of the flying saucer-like orbs he fashioned for a Neiman Marcus cover years ago.
